Half-hour documentary film 'A Will to Preach' examines perspective, impact of Bishop William Willimon

COLUMBIA, S.C. – A Will to Preach, a half-hour documentary film examining the perspective and impact of renowned minister Bishop William Willimon, is being made available to public television stations this spring. Presented by South Carolina ETV (SCETV) and distributed by American Public Television (APT), the project was produced by Susie Films.

William Henry Willimon is an American theologian and bishop in the United Methodist Church. He is currently professor of the Practice of Christian Ministry and director of the Doctor of Ministry program at Duke Divinity School, where he previously served as dean of the school's chapel for two decades. One of America's best-known, most influential and most frequently read preachers, Willimon has authored approximately 80 books.

To examine Willimon's perspective and theology, A Will to Preach touches on several characteristics of his preaching style, including his affinity for storytelling, his use of laughter and his desire to act as a provocateur, emphasizing the radicality of Jesus Christ. The film features archived footage of past sermons delivered by Willimon, as well as interviews with students, colleagues at Duke Divinity School, fellow ministers and his wife, Patsy Willimon.
